Corporate Review Discusses Utility Line Warranty with Utility Service Partners

Canonsburg, Pennsylvania – Utility Service Partners, Inc. (USP) spoke with Corporate Review to discuss the effects of aging infrastructure on communities around the nation. For homeowners, addressing this issue can be extremely expensive. Private lines, subject to the same elements that cause problems in public infrastructure, are the responsibility of homeowners and could lead to costly repairs.

“For cities, critical utility systems can end up being a major expense,” said Vice President of Programming for Corporate Review, JL Haber. “When we heard about how Utility Service Partners works to provide low-cost warranties to cover repairs to these utility lines when something goes wrong, we had to get them on the show to spread the information.”

When water and sewer lines break, it is a hassle for homeowners to find a reputable plumber and pay for the unexpected subsequent repair. Since these lines are underground, repair work often requires digging and obtaining permits, which can add to the cost. Utility Service Partners works together with cities around the nation to bring the National League of Cities Service Line Warranty Program to communities as a solution for homeowners through low-cost warranty protection. These warranties cover the high costs of line repairs while also protecting the environment. Aging infrastructure has become a forefront issue for communities around the nation and water and wastewater infrastructure was given an overall D grade from the American Society of Civil Engineers.
